Medved Discusses the Latest Trends in Mobile Communications as Entrepreneurs and Cutting-Edge Companies Push for Further Social Mobile Interaction

NEW YORK, Jan. 26, 2012 /PRNewswire/ -- Vringo, Inc. (NYSE Amex: VRNG), a provider of software platforms for mobile social and video applications, today announced that an article authored by its CEO Jon Medved was featured in the January 2012 Asia-Pacific edition of Connect-World magazine.

The article, titled "Bringing the Social Context into Mobile Voice and Messaging Services," discusses the latest trends in mobile communications as entrepreneurs and cutting-edge companies around the world push for further social mobile interaction.

"The younger generation is constantly multi-tasking electronically and combining various types of messaging and social interactions within single platforms. They need more stimulation and context to keep their interest in a process, and so the natural next step is to incorporate their social environments within the context of the call or messaging environments," describes Mr. Medved.

The article explains that despite the fact that today's smartphones are defined by their high-quality, large screens which enable them to display visually rich content, the phone call and messaging screens of these devices are mostly "dead time," still displaying simple contact details and short messages such as caller ID that are standard on traditional legacy devices.

Mr. Medved concludes, "The social context after, during, and post the call or messaging session will give the callers or 'texters' a richer experience. With the social network as the enabler of the call or the message, interesting news, pictures, events and anecdotes will not only be shared verbally but enjoyed digitally by each party at the same time."

Vringo is focused on seizing this swelling shift toward enhanced social mobile interaction with its increasingly popular Facetones™ app, which generates an automatic, visually exciting slideshow of pictures and social content directly from friends' Facebook® profiles each time a user initiates or receives a call, or simply texts a contact on their mobile device.
