About Craig-Hallum Alpha Select Conference

Entering its fourth year, the Craig-Hallum Alpha Select Conference has earned a reputation among its clients as an important idea generation opportunity. Attending companies have been individually selected by the Craig-Hallum research team and are either currently on the Alpha Select List or display characteristics that are consistent with the Alpha Select List. The Alpha Select List is collection of small, under-followed public companies that Craig-Hallum believes have the potential to become much larger.

The format of the conference is focused around one-on-one meetings with attending companies preparing an open half hour presentation and spending the remainder of the day in discussions with individual investors. With an investor-to-company personnel ratio under 4:1, investors have a high degree of access to company management.
